

ABSTRACT

An improved method of preparing an intermediate for the return of a channel letter wherein the intermediate is cut from the same sheet stock as the back and face of the letter using a router, which removes material along the edge of the return and along the width of the 5 return indicating the direction and shape that the finished return will take and removing material from the edge and width of the intermediate to facilitate the shaping and bending of the intermediate into its finished configuration.